Investment Objective

The Index seeks to provide a return on investment that tracks, as consistently as possible, the United States of America equity markets, as measured by the MSCI United States of America index.

Investment Policy

The Index invests its assets using index management techniques developed by the State Street, which are designed to track the performance and risk of the MSCI United States of America index (with reinvestment of net dividends).

Investment outlook

Following a robust recovery in global equity markets during the final 9 months of 2009, the beginning of 2010 saw increased volatility amid growing uncertainty regarding the Euro and the expected worldwide economic recovery.

The MSCI World Index lost 4.1% in January, the MSCI EAFE (non US industrialized markets) fell 4.4% and the Eurozone itself fell by 4.7% (in Euros) or 6.7% in US$. The growing risk of sovereign default in the Eurozone grabbed investors attention when Greece reported that its previous deficit numbers were severely misleading and it had under-reported how large their budget deficit was. The Greek effect has led to detailed reviews of other large deficit running countries in the Eurozone, particularly Spain, Portugal, Ireland and Italy, which are also huge concerns too.

Eurozone economic growth is expected to be far slower now than any US or Asian recovery and structural unemployment is growing across Europe. The lack of an easy way to resolve the sovereign debt crises has been shown by the lack of EU resolve to sort out the Greek situation expeditiously. This may be satisfactory, however when dealing with a relatively small member of the EU, but such solutions are inappropriate for the likes of Spain or Italy.

In the US, despite a good 4th quarter GDP growth figure of over 5%, analysts believe that the country will record economic growth of between just 3.5%-4% for 2010. Coming off a very low base and with very little likelihood of bringing unemployment rates below the 9% level - there is little room for comfort. By any measure, the US led recovery will consequently be a jobless recovery at best, as the over leverage US consumer continues to adjust his/her spending habits and the absence of new growth industries are not going to be able to fuel renewed demand. This is unlike the recovery of 2001, when real estate demand fed by low rates buoyed the US economy, creating millions of new jobs related to construction, mortgage financing etc.

It is expected that it will take at least 4-5 years for unemployment levels to retreat back to the pre crisis levels of 5%-6%.

Although US companies on the S&P 500 have mostly beaten market expectations regarding their earnings, much of this is on the back of once off expenditure cuts. Top line growth remains anemic at best.

The Pacific region saw a 1.4% loss for the month (US$) - when excluding Japan, the region in fact lost 6.8% for the period.

The nervousness and sell off in mid-late January subsided by mid February, with both the Hang Seng recovering above 20,000 and the Nikkei returned to 10,100 levels.

The US REIT (listed property) market posted a negative 5.7% return for January, following an equally impressive 2009 total return of 28.5%.

It is clear that the US financial system will continue to see failed banks and the real estate meltdown (specifically commercial properties) persist for another 12-18 months - when prices are expected to bottom out. Approximately 140 smaller US banks were liquidated or taken over during 2009 - a record over the past 2 decades.
